Course Description

This course will take an interdisciplinary approach toward understanding current trade wars and the world trading system based on studies of economics, political science, and international trade law. You will learn what international trade policy is about, why it becomes politicized, and how trade policies are formulated in the U.S. and China and used against each other. Another important component of this course is to study how current trade policies are governed by international agreements and laws. Along the way, we will explore current trade trends and how they affect consumers, workers, firms, and industries in the U.S. and other places. You will also learn about domestic and international trade institutions more generally, and traderelated topics on the environment, labor, intellectual property, and more.

Learning Outcomes

Students will develop a broad understanding of current trade controversies and apply theoretical and analytical tools to examine real world cases.

Outcome	Method of Assessment
Demonstrate an understanding of the economic, political, legal background of the current U.S. trade war with China	Student presentation, weekly discussion and assessment.
Demonstrate proficiency in interpreting graphs, charts, and tables relating to international trade relations	Student presentation, weekly discussion and assessment.
Identify the ways in which international trade has been politicized and mis-conceptualized	Student presentation, weekly discussion and assessment.
Analyze how trade-related measures are governed under international trade agreements and WTO principles	Student presentation, weekly discussion and assessment.
Analyze major trade disputes under the WTO	Student presentation, weekly discussion and assessment.

Texts & Materials

Students with serious interest in the topics are encouraged to refer to the following reading materials which will not be fully covered in class:

- Liang, Guoyong and Haoyuan Ding, The China-US Trade War. Routledge, 2021. Book available online via University Libraries.
- Barton, John H., Goldstein, Judith L., Josling, Timothy E., & Steinberg, Richard H., 2008. The Evolution of the Trade Regime: Politics, Law, and Economics of the GATT and the WTO. Princeton University Press. Book available online via University Libraries.

Students are also advised to regularly keep up with current developments in international trade. Useful sources include the Financial Times, The Economist, the Council on Foreign Relations, CRS reports, and the World Trade Organization website (http://www.wto.org).

Course Requirements

The final course grade will be determined based on a mixture of written assignments, group discussions, and class participation.

- 1. Group case study (30%): You will be responsible for leading one seminar-type discussion during the course of the semester. For this, you will create PowerPoint slides of the following content: 1) a brief summary of the assigned week's class materials, 2) an indepth case study of a real-world example that reinforces the assigned week's lessons, and 3) a few discussion questions to be answered by the class (for their participation points). Your presentation grade will be determined by the class (20), your groupmates (5), and the instructor (5). Presenters of the week must have their presentation idea approved by me ahead of time and send me their draft slides via email by Monday 11:55pm of the presenting week. I will provide feedback on your draft, which I expect you to incorporate into your final slides. You will also upload your final slides to 'Group Presentation' in UBLearns by Wednesday 11:55pm of the presenting week. Please note that non-participation in the group case study (as reported by peers) will negatively affect your individual grade. Complete non-participation will result in zero points for this assessment.
- 2. Weekly virtual assessments (25%): Each Friday morning, I will post the weekly assessment under 'Weekly Course Materials' in UBLearns. Each weekly assessment has a total of 25 points. 10 points is achieved by evaluating the quality of that week's group presentation and discussion. Another 15 points is achieved by answering some questions assessing your understanding of the course material covered during lecture that week. Responses must be submitted by 11:55pm of that Saturday. Late submissions are not acceptable unless excused by the instructor ahead of time. No submission will result in zero points for that week. The average of all weekly assessments will be used to determine your final grade. Note that presenters are not required to submit their weekly assessment on the week of presenting.
- 3. Attendance and participation (15%): Students are expected to attend and actively participate in class discussions.
- Final paper (30%): There will be a single final paper that is due on December 15 at 11:55pm. Details about the assignment will be announced later in the semester. Late submissions will be penalized 1 point per day.
